

~Pale Lager~

The most popular styles of beer in the world fall into this category. Pale golden color with a light, foamy, white head. Pale Lagers typically have a slight hop presence in the nose and taste with a good balance of bready malts to balance the flavor. Very crisp, with high drinkability.

~IPA~

India Pale Ales are a craft brewers playground. Originally brewed in England for the long trip to India, large amounts of hops were added for preservation. Now, American craft brewers dominate this style, pushing the envelope with new hop strains and ever increasing ABVs

~Porter~

A medium to full body in a balanced beer that has a noticeably coffee-like dryness, malty sweet flavor. Chocolate and black malts add a sharp bitterness, and slightly roasted flavor. Porters are very dark, complex beers that can be modified with heavy hops, barrel aging, or adding coffee or chocolate flavors.

~Stout~

A rich, extra-dark, black ale. Medium to very full bodied, the distinguishing feature is the use of roasted barley to produce a slightly roasted (coffee-like) trait. Hop bitterness in classic stouts is low, but modern versions can be heavily hopped. Modern versions can also be aged in bourbon barrels, or augmented with specialty ingredients.
